

CHINA / National

Draft law on energy due soon

(Shanghai Daily)

Updated: 2008-03-03 12:32

China's new draft energy law will soon be submitted to the State Council for review as the period for public comment has ended, a senior energy official said yesterday.

The draft law calls for a more market-oriented pricing system and requires oil companies to set up inventories to supplement the state's strategic petroleum reserves.

After review by the State Council, or the Cabinet, the long-anticipated law still needs approval by the National People's Congress before it can be enacted, said Xu Dingming, deputy director of the Office of the National Energy Leading Group. NPC is China's top legislature.

Procedures

"There is not a timetable for the law's enactment, as we have to follow proper procedures," Xu told an industry conference in Langfang, Hebei Province.

In January, Ye Sirong, deputy chief of the drafting team, said the draft could be submitted to the National People's Congress this year and be enacted in 2009 at the earliest.

The law's draft was published for public opinion in December last year, and comments were solicited until February 1.

Xu said thousands of suggestions from private companies had been collected concerning regulation and taxation, and some had been adopted. He didn't elaborate.

However, Xu yesterday declined to comment on the progress of creating a new energy ministry. Some media have speculated that a new ministry would be unlikely to be approved by the annual session of the National People's Congress which starts on Wednesday.

China has been considering setting up an energy ministry for a few years to boost efficiency and protect energy security when oil prices are hitting highs above US$100 a barrel.

But such a ministry would be difficult to set up because of the delicate balance of interests between

Top China News

- Stock market not to turn bearish: economist
- China will not face recession after Olympics
- 'Symbolic city' to help revive traditional values
- Policy bank to gradually go commercial
- Dusty weather continues in north China

Today's Top News

- Post-snow reconstruction unleases big orders
- Inflation major concern of lawmakers
- Medvedev wins Russian election
- Net more dangerous for Chinese kids
- Yao Ming to go under the knife

Most Commented/Read Stories in 48 Hours

- Archaeologists unveil finds in Rome digs
- Women mark International Women's Day
- Students arrive at Arctic station
- College girls go nude before camera for eternal beauty
- LatAm leaders agree to end border crisis
- Latin American leaders shake off diplomatic crisis

various government bodies and state-owned oil giants.

Currently, China's energy policy is set by the National Development and Reform Commission, China's top planning agency, and the Office of the National Energy Leading Group. Both report to the State Council.

Xu was previously the head of the energy bureau under the NDRC.

 Print This Article  E-mail _

Comments on the story (total 0)

| About China Daily | About Chinadaily.com.cn | Advertise on Site | Contact Us | Site Map | Job Offer |

Copyright 1995-2007. All rights reserved. The content (including but not limited to text, photo, multimedia information, etc) published in this site belongs to China Daily Information Co (CDIC). Without written authorization from CDIC, such content shall not be republished or used in any form.

Note: Browsers with 1024*768 or higher resolution are suggested for this site.

Registration Number: 2010000002731

